Charles B. Robertson, a merchant and planter, doing business at Indian Creek, Miss. was found dead in his bed at the Priddy House, yesterday, under circumstances that left no doubt, under circumstances, and the principal properties of the sum of the priddy House, late Saturday evening and registered in a nervous, uncertain hand, as Charles Builer, Arkanssas. He remained all night, paid his bill in the morning and left. Sunday evening he again registered under the same name and address, ate supper and retired to his room. About 9 o'clock he called for a cup and spoon, which were taken to him by a bell-boy. The latter, as he was about to leave the room, saw Robertson pour a spoonful of some white substance out of a paper-covered bottle into the spoon, dropping the latter into a cup partly filled with water. He supposed it to be some simple medicine, shut the door behind him and thought no more about it.

Yesterday morning Mrs. Robertson a rived in the city, and at once reported to the police that her husband, who had come to Memphiso on business, had been absent several days over his time, and that she was very uneasy about him, as he was sometimes in the habit of drinking. Chief Davis at once put the detectives on the trial, and they succeeded in tracing Robertson to the Triddy House. The portor was sent to his room, and in order that he might not escape habent several days over his time, and that she was very uneasy about him, as he was sometimes in the habit of drinking. MME. NILSON recently appeared in the closing concert of the Pittsburg Festival and, to use the enthusiastic report of the Dady Post, "The Swedish songstress again captured Pittsburg's musical citadel. The last night of the festival was ushered in by rain, but despite the weather the largest audience of the week was on hand to greet Pittsburg's old favorite, Mme. Christine Nilsson. The huge auditorium was leterally packed with humanity, every available seat being taken, while every foot of room that could be gotten at held some one willing to hear her. Her name was on every lip, and it was self-evident that on every lip, and it was self-evident that she was the magnet which attracted the immense assemblage."

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It renegres the little sufferer at once; it produces natural, quiet sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to taste. It soothes the child, soliens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhes, whether arising from teething or other causes.
